I'm a User Experience Professional focusing on UX Strategy and Architecture who loves taking on big, messy, interconnected systems and turning them into experiences that actually make sense for the people who use them. Most of my career has been spent modernizing enterprise platforms, shaping long-term UX strategy, and helping cross-functional teams move from ambiguity to clarity. I'm looking for a role where I can bring that same mix of vision, structure, and practical execution to a team that's ready to level up.

What I Bring

- Deep enterprise UX leadership across global sales, configuration, commerce, and support ecosystems.
- A systems-first mindset—unified interaction models, scalable frameworks, and multi-tenant patterns that hold up under real-world complexity.
- Modernization experience transforming legacy tools into cohesive, intuitive platforms that support long-term growth.
- Workflow simplification that reduces friction, improves accuracy, and opens the door for automation and AI-driven improvements.
- Strong cross-functional partnership with engineering, product, and business teams to keep strategy and delivery tightly aligned.
- Future-state thinking including roadmaps, visioning, and identifying opportunities for smarter, more efficient workflows.
- A consulting background that taught me how to quickly understand complex domains—finance, telecom, gaming, simulation—and make them usable.
- End-to-end execution from research and prototyping to validation, stakeholder alignment, and integration into CI/CD pipelines.

If you're looking for someone who can bring clarity to complexity, elevate product strategy, and help deliver experiences that actually work at scale, I'd love to connect.
